Distributed Security, Inc announces new certification program for former law enforcement, military, and agency operators

CHICAGO, Illinois — Building on its 10-year-old Combative Firearms Instructor certification, Distributed Security, Inc. today announced its new Distributed Security Advisor program for former law enforcement, military, and agency professionals. Intended to fill the vacuum created by the permanent challenges now facing law enforcement agencies nationwide, the DSA program trains, develops, and certifies security professionals to contribute profitably and legally to the immediate defense of their local communities.

“In this brave new world, communities can no longer count on a broken system of agenda driven politicians, woke bureaucrats or weakened law enforcement to provide a safe, secure environment to conduct business and make a living,” said Distributed Security Inc. Chief Instructor Ron Danielowski. “Now more than ever, it is up to individual entities to defend the community and its interests, and our Distributed Security Advisor program develops the professionals necessary to accomplish this.”

The DSA program certifies and authorizes qualifying individuals to instruct, advise, and promote Distributed Security service offerings to individuals, businesses, schools, and churches in their local community. This is a value-added training and advisory opportunity, providing a full menu of services that can be instructed or promoted, ranging from fundamental firearms instruction to fully integrated turnkey enterprise solutions. DSAs are compensated via training fees, revenue commissions, and membership subscriptions.

The DSA certification process takes 160 hours and is delivered over 16 weeks via online instruction culminating with three on-site range days. DSA candidates will learn how to instruct the DSI curriculum and promote DSI’s enterprise offerings. Each week the candidate participates in online lectures and discussions, video dry practice exercises, and is required to complete homework assignments. A certification exam and successful completion of range qualifications at the end of the program are required to achieve certification. The DSA Certificate will become a coveted achievement for security professionals.

The inaugural class is forming now and will kick-off September 21, 2020. More information at the link <https://distributedsecurity.com/offerings/certifications/dsa-certification.html> or contact les@distributedsecurity.com.
